Gender Based Violence and Médecins du Monde

Gender-Based Violence (as GBV) is a violation of fundamental rights, a public health problem and a huge obstacle to gender equality.

This violence can be based on gender inequalities, discrimination, poverty, deprivation of basic resources or war and conflicts.

This problem has serious negative impacts on the individual's physical, sexual and psychological health, as well as on his/her environment.

It is imperative to fight this problem to enforce the right to health, protect and develop sexual and reproductive health and associated rights, as well as to ensure peace and promote sustainable development

Conclusion

- Integrate the fight against Gender-Based Violence in all projects.
- Adapt to people who have suffered violence: by putting them at the heart of each step of the process. Making them actors and actors of their own care.
- Coordinate between actors from different institutions and advocate for a better coordination system, especially at national level on the theme of GBV
- Work on the identification of people in order to allow better access to services and to provide survivors with services adapted to their needs, through holistic care, which includes a reconstruction dimension and to allow them to regain their place within their social group.
- Work on prevention and raising awareness with regard to all members of society.
